What the National Socialist endgame looks like.

A while ago, a subscriber left me a comment asking what a NatSoc society would look like after the struggle to gain power & put everything together. To be completely honest, it's something that I haven't looked deeply into. Within the NS community, we have a general understanding of the world afterwards in the way of specifics. Meaning we know what won't be carrying over into the NS Order & what will be brought back. Many of these are common to most of the Dissident Right so I won't bother touching on stuff like that. Obviously gay marriage isn't going to stay. But once you put everything together, what does this society look like on the grand scale?

Before I start, I must reiterate something very important that is too often misunderstood by many even within the movement. National Socialism is not a simple ideology, it is a 'Weltanschauung' - or worldview. Ideology is simply the Realpolitik & praxis of this worldview. This will become important when we get into details like economics or statism which are much more vague than one may expect. National Socialism approaches the world from a fundamentally different perspective than say Liberalism.

Völkstaat

When one thinks of NS & Fascism, one often thinks of a radically authoritarian State. This may be true for Fascism, particularly the classical variant we see in Giovanni Gentile's writings, but not NS. In reality, National Socialism views the state as relatively unimportant in the grand scheme of things. The State is most importantly viewed as the mobilization of the people for a purpose. In absence of purpose, the State doesn't need to exist in a NS society.

A core tenet of NS is Organicism, it pervades the entire worldview at a foundational level. From this, the State is viewed as an organic entity. Just as individuals formed families which formed clans which formed tribes which formed nations. The State is an evolution of this. While Liberal thinkers try to separate the State from the people, the NatSoc sees that this will inevitably lead to conflict. By separating the people from the state you open the door to an adversarial relationship between the two. In an NS society the people, the state, and the land they inhabit are all viewed as a single, organic entity.

Ultimately, it matters very little how the minutiae of statesmanship & bureaucracy function. Obviously, the great evil of democracy is off the table. But the State could be headed by a King appointed by bloodright or selected from a supreme council. There must be a single leader, which Hitler called the Führerprinzip, but how he is selected is ultimately irrelevant. The most NS way to select a leader is arguably the manner in which Julius Caesar took his position, but that's a personal idealistic view.

The State is principally made up of communities. The idea of Community is best described by Kurt Eggers in his collected writings. Communities are first & foremost created organically. They cannot be created, only grow like the trees in the forest. Seeds may be planted, but no more. The loss of true communities in modernity is possibly among its greatest crimes. In contrast to the loneliness of modernity, an organic community is built around mutual support & duty. Further, the leaders of these communities arise naturally, based on whoever proves to be a leader within it. Perhaps larger cities may need a small state of their own to govern & organize, but communities do not.

Lastly, I will touch on the concept of Totalitarianism. The word has today come to mean a sort of rabid hyperauthoritarianism. This is not the original definition. Originally, the term did not mean the State controls every aspect of life, rather the State influenced all parts of life. A far cry from the governments of today, who seem to actively ignore the issues facing their subjects whenever possible, the NS State exists to unify the smaller organs of the Nation. The Italians put it well by saying "Everything within the state, nothing outside the state, nothing against the state." The Völkstaat is the people, and every other organ that makes it up. There is no separation.

Which leads into the next part...

Corporatism

Hopefully anyone reading this knows what Corporatism is. If you think it has anything to do with big business or modern corporations, you're NGMI & should leave politics.

There's a lot of confusion with this topic. In general, many people nowadays assume Corporatism to be the principal economic policy of any Fascistesque movement, based on writings from the Italians. In reality, Corporatism isn't really an economic policy in the same way as Capitalism & such, it's more so an organizational philosophy based off of Organicism. Corporatism is based heavily along the lines of both medieval Guilds & turn of the century Syndicalism. The essential concept of it is that economic factions (agriculture, military, culinary, etc) work as a single body - hence the root word 'Corpus.' It's based on cooperation instead of competition. The Syndicalist influence is that the workers are taken into account as much as the bourgeois owners. Essentially these economic sectors function as sub-governments in themselves, working with each other similar to how provinces do within a country.

Aside from the organic nature of this, this also allows a sort of technocracy to take shape as the leaders & bureaucrats of these guilds/syndicates would be the experts of their fields. Further, it regimentalizes the economy allowing more control by the Völkstaat without being overly centralized as in the USSR.

It is by this organic nature & inclusion within the wider Võlkstaat that National Socialism derives its 'Socialism' from. Since everything is a part of the State, the economy is inherently socially controlled & thus it is Socialist by the proper definition - deliberately ignoring the Marxist redefinition of Socialism that seems to include basically nothing.

Within Nazi Germany, we can see this play out where Hitler generally didn't meddle much in the affairs of business except to give a guiding hand & introduce protections for workers by way of price controls & the like. Although there was a general policy of privatization in the mid-30's, it's important to note that most of this privatized industry was given to allies or outright members of the NSDAP, who knew exactly what their role was within the Reich.

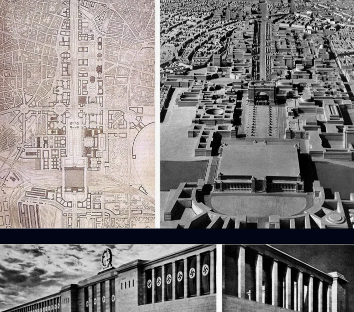

As I stated in the intro, National Socialism is worldview before it is an ideology. Views on economics aren't important outside of the realpolitik of the day, as approached by that NS perspective. In the words of Hitler, "The basic feature of our economic theory is that we have no theory at all." This wasn't for lack of concern, but simply reflects the flexible nature of NS ideology. The economic theory is whatever is necessary at the time, even total Laissez-Faire Capitalism in a perfect world.

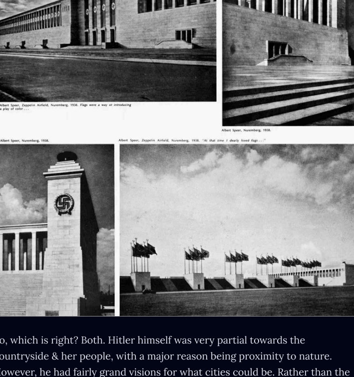

Land Development

Anyone who's approached the NS sphere, both today & in Hitler's time, will likely see a sort of double face in this regard. On one hand, you often see pictures of farmland & forests. Truly natural areas, often accompanied by traditional architecture like the sod roofed homes of Scandinavia.

On the other hand, we often see artwork representing quite grandiose cities with striking architecture. The best example is the planned future of Berlin by architect Albert Speer.

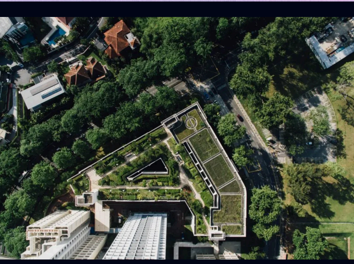

So, which is right? Both. Hitler himself was very partial towards the countryside & her people, with a major reason being proximity to nature. However, he had fairly grand visions for what cities could be. Rather than the depressing & anti-nature feeling of many Western cities today, cities in the NS realm would be works of art in & of themselves. The draw of cities isn't convenience or work opportunity, rather it's the raw beauty of them. The city would be defined by its megalithic structures & sculptures. Certainly no room for half empty glass towers with no aesthetic or cultural significance.

A more recent development towards cities, based off of NS reverence for ecology & in reaction to modern understanding of the effects cities have on nature, is the concept of EcoCities. In order to avoid becoming too detached from nature, these cities would likely include as much greenery as possible. Flowers, trees, parks, at every opportunity. Some cities in Western Amerika show what this may look like well, such as Tacoma, WA

On a side note, specifically referring to my Amerikaner readership, the US concept of a neighborhood/suburb has to go. Its profoundly ecologically damaging & also anti-social. When I say this, I'm specifically referring to the massive expanses of virtually identical overpriced drywall housing that pervades Amerikaner society. Europoors have us beat in this regard, I'm afraid. Urban living will likely be similar to the 'flats' in European cities while the countryside probably won't look too different. On that, the weird western obsession with lawns is unnatural & frankly gay. If you own land, even just a small amount, it should be full of flowers, shrubs, moss, gardens, etc. A flat plot of augustine grass is so gay & one of the worst things boomers popularized. Nearly kept lawns are for large buildings like Versailles & serves the purpose of allowing the grand to be used for social events & sports, it's not visibly attractive & doesn't look good outside a family home.

Back to the urban side, culture would look much different. The focus on localized, organic communities would still be in play. The physical space of these communities would likely be smaller due to population density, not dissimilar to how neighborhoods were in cities in the 50's back. There would be dedicated spaces of nature like parks & gardening space for the community to not severe the link to nature & encourage self reliance. Obviously, all of this would take considerable amount of urban planning but I think it's clear that the cities of the future, regardless of ideology, must be deliberately planned or they inevitably end up as hellscapes like Shanghai or LA.

And to touch on something that has become somewhat controversial in the wider RW, 15 minute cities are actually awesome & I'm tired of hearing chuds say otherwise because the main proponents nowadays are Libtards. This is something I never became very interested in until I visited Europe & say how easily even the biggest cities are traversed via train or other public transport. Not to mention how easy it is to find what you need within walking distance. While walking or riding the subway in NYC might seem like a nightmare for many Americans, bear in mind this would be in an NS society - so no Blacks or other undesirable elements. The best one for me was Geneva, Switzerland. I stayed in an AirBnB flat near downtown & didn't ride in a car once for the week I was there & only had to ride the bus a couple times to visit notable landmarks. Besides, Americans could stand to waste less money on automobiles & burn a few more calories taking a walk. Especially today's urbanites.

Which leads into my next point.

Public Health & Eugenics

Again, this parts mainly directed towards my American audience. Europoors still take note because you're not in the clear entirely either.

Firstly, all the chemicals that cause cancer & defects are going away immediately. Europeans have done this for decades but our corrupt FDA has failed us in this regard. I doubt I have the need to list the harmful chemicals in the vast majority of American food, you likely already know the big names. Goyslop has got to go. The obvious alternative being healthy & organic foods, these already exist but are generally overpriced because it's produced by smaller companies trying to compete with massive corporations that take every opportunity to cut cost regardless of health impacts.

Further, certain foods that are generally already known as junk food should go for the most part. Fast food, potato chips, all the fat fuck food. They probably don't have to be outright banned, but definitely heavily taxed & regulated to discourage over consumption. A lot of people fail to realize the reason for obesity in America is that a lot of our food has limited nutritional value but high calories. Hunger isn't caused by a lack of food, it's caused by lack of nutrients. You can eat nothing but Doritos for a week & be starving the entire time, regardless of how much you consume, because you aren't getting proper nutrition. This is why Europeans often eat in smaller portions, their food is usually more nutritious due to regulatory actions & thus they don't get hungry as much. This is also why virtually everyone that weighs some ridiculous amount like 300+lbs is almost always getting fat off of soda & McDonald's. Current America has a very serious problem in that healthy food is often too expensive for many families so they're forced into buying lower quality junk food. That's why you see kids at growth spurt age getting fat but not much taller - they may be taking in calories but not the necessary nutrients to actually grow.

On that, Hitlerjugend. The Hitler Youth was probably my favorite thing to learn about when first approaching National Socialism. It was essentially the same thing as JROTC & Boy Scouts but with grander ambition & more direct efforts towards achieving that ambition. It goes without saying that the Hitler Youth, or whatever it's future equivalent is, has the foremost goal of indoctrination. This may seem harsh from a Liberal perspective, but many probably already know that virtually any government run education fulfills this exact purpose more subtly. Virtually every thing you learn in classes like Civics, History, or Social Studies is blatant propaganda & indoctrination. The only real difference is that 1) they will be indoctrinated into National Socialism instead of Liberalism and 2) NatSocs have no need or desire to obscure or hide this fact behind deceptive language or denialism.

The principal purpose of the Hitler Youth is to put into action what is already learned in school. For example, children will learn of the great men of history in their classes. The Hitler Youth will give guidance on how to emulate them. Classes will teach about nutrition & fitness, Hitler Youth will show you how to utilize & expand on this. The foremost goal of the Hitler Youth is to prepare the youth on how to tackle the world as a NatSoc. This will also be the training ground for the Völksturm, where youth will learn the basics of military tactics, firearms training, etc. This will be done both as a sort of sport & to prepare the citizenry as a whole for either mili service or defense of the Nation from outside. Further, it instills a fighting spirit in the youth that will allow them to be fiercely individual. For the Nietzscheans, this is an obvious step towards creating the Overman.

Hitler Youth would also act as a public service agency, putting the older youth to work in service of the Völkstaat in a manner similar to youth volunteer organizations already established. The later years of Hitler Youth membership should also serve to test the talents, abilities & passions of young men & women to see what their future career may be. It is here where we find who has the potential to be great artists, warriors, statesmen, teachers, scientists, etc. We can use this same system of identifying favorable traits for our eugenics program.

I'm getting too good at these transitions man >:3

Eugenics is another big no-no word in modernity, Libtards hate it because they now their support rests on the lowest echelons of society & they know they're rarely part of the eugenic pool. A healthy society generally requires their eventual removal. Regardless, eugenics has a long history & has only been taken as a bad thing in the post-war era. Unless you're a dysgenic freak, there's really no argument against improving the quality of human life.

Eugenics measures wouldn't look much different than historical policies. Simply identify individuals with good traits & incentivize them having kids, preferably a good number. The easiest way to get eugenically valuable people together is to make it socially desirable to be a eugenic couple & provide financial incentives like tax breaks or subsidized housing. Obviously, teaching children to select their partners in a eugenic manner will be part of the sex ed section of schooling as well. From there, further incentivize children by providing even lower taxes or just outright giving a decent amount of money monthly for Lebenborn children. It's surprisingly simple.

Aside from functional things like IQ or aesthetic beauty I personally believe we should also encourage the biodiversity of our race. I'm specifically referring to gingers, green eyes, etc. These less common things which aren't really functional but would be a shane to see go extinct.

Now, the dysgenic side of things. As we expand the higher echelons of society we should also eliminate the lowest. Destruction of worthless life & all that. The best way to do this is to provide individuals that we absolutely do not want reproducing a decent some of money to get sterilized. I think most dregs in society would absolutely take the deal of like $20k for getting themselves fixed. For the extreme cases like profound retardation I doubt many will abject to forced sterilization at a young age.

All in all, a eugenics policy is strikingly simple & not nearly as oppressive or dystopian as some may lead you to believe. Over time standards will change, bringing the Völk as whole to higher levels. Overtime, a new breed will develop to carry us into the future.

Finally, encouraging public fitness. Physical fitness tests will be necessary to pass on to the next grade in school, just like any other subject. It's frankly offensive that this isn't a policy in schools today. These tests will increase in difficulty as one gets older, and will likely closely resemble those used in military organizations. Obviously these won't be some insane Navy SEAL selection test, but they will require a baseline of decent fitness to pass & pretty decent level to get a high grade on. Fat fucks will get in shape or get held back. Further, I'm a big proponent of universal healthcare similar to the Nordic model. People who are incapable of maintaining their own health should simply be barred from wasting the State's resources. If you aren't at least roughly healthy then you don't get healthcare, morbidly obese people dying is probably for the best anyway.

Aside from the more systematic methods listed above, this can also be generally accomplished by forming a culture that values health & fitness through education & propaganda. This is the most effective means but the most difficult to implement in a short time frame.

Spiritually/Religion

This is a more controversial topic that I will try to handle more carefully, putting aside personal disdain for certain beliefs.

Firstly, modern Christianity is entirely incompatible with the National Socialist worldview. There may be some sects that remedy this like Christian Identity but they're few & far between. The Vatican is a foreign influence that will not be allowed to invade the NS society & evangelicalism is Judophilic to its core. Basically none of the well established Christian sects will remain. That isn't to say the Völkstaat would be openly hostile to individual Christians, but the influence of the Church will be ignored by the State.

This may seem like a massively difficult prospect, but in reality Christianity has declined massively over the past several decades in White countries anyway. Whether they shift to agnosticism, deism, or some other tradition is irrelevant. God, in the West, is dead. I wouldn't say the NS society would be completely Völkische Pagan but it will most likely bare similarities to the Third Reich with its indifference towards Christianity & heavy usage of the symbols & legends of pre-Christian Germanic culture & spirituality. In the future, we may see a more deliberate shift towards something resembling our ancestral religion, but that will take time & ultimately doesn't affect the NS society much anyway.

The best example would be to look at the Third Reich & it's policies towards religion, keeping in mind that Christianity is a shell of what it was in the 1930's.

Geopolitics

Just like in the 30's, the relationship of the Völkstaat to other countries will be either on the basis of similar ideology or pure pragmatism. Hypothetically, we may end up allies with Iran. Not because we have much in common with Iran, but because both Nations may find it advantageous at the time. The foremost concern with the Völkstaat is ensuring the freedom of its citizens, protecting them from outside coercion and influence. This means maintaining a strong military & maintaining as much autarky/economic self sufficiency as possible.

Another goal will likely be the freedom of Völk outside the Nation. If this was set up in Amerika, this means providing asylum for & seeking to free our European brothers - or vice versa. Considering the genocide currently happening in White nations, this may necessitate outright war against the governments occupying our völks lands, otherwise it may resemble something like the Cold War.

Other than that, the rest of the world will essentially be at our mercy. Return to peak European colonialism. It's your birthright.

Conclusion

I intentionally left out things that should be fairly obvious, like racial purity. Anyone would be able to infer that Germanic peoples will be the sole inhabitants of the Völkstaat, among other things. It's important to keep in mind that much of NS ideology is simply based of the realpolitik of the space & time it inhabits, so it really amounts to approaching all issues from a certain state of mind - the worldview. Hopefully looking at specific topics like the ones laid out above will clue you in to how other issues would be tackled. For this reason, it's best to not get too caught up in the specifics until they become relevant. If anyone has specific questions they're curious about, feel free to reach out.

I like some of what you wrote down like Corporatism, Self-sufficiency, and beautifying the city. However, I'm skeptical on Universal Healthcare. Will this force everyone to receive it or can those who don't want it choose to opt out? As for the religious section, I agree Evangelicalism needs to go and I guess for someone who is non-Catholic and even myself as a Catholic I wouldn't want the Vatican to have Uber-Influence over my nation. I'm not a Theocrat. Over all, good articles. Peace

P.S. As for lawns, I think it's more of personal taste. I don't mind grass in front of my house as long as it's well maintained.
